Women In Educational Leadership Hilina Sintayehu, Ayalew Shibeshi

The society we live in needs more women leaders, especially in primary schools. As these schools are the places we help carve the minds of those that are going to take over our tomorrow. The challenges for women to take the leadership position starts from they themselves and expands in to the culture of the society and everything in between. The contribution of those women and men already in the leadership positions to influence to strive to achieve for such positions is significant. This manuscript entails the challenges today's women teachers in primary schools are facing in their journey up the career ladder.
