The modern temptations towards individualism, materialism, and consumerism often make us deaf to the Gospel message's challenge to deny ourselves, take up our cross, and follow in the footsteps of Jesus. It is a message that truly afflicts the comfortable and comforts the afflicted. Issues of social justice and peace frequently surface in the Gospel of Mark which so dominates the readings for this cycle of the liturgical year. These thoughtful reflections challenge us to look more carefully into the meaning of our lives and to ask ourselves what God is calling us individually to do as his instruments here on earth. Priests and deacons will find much material that will be helpful in their homily preparation. And the average person in the pew will find much to ponder here for their own growth in the Spirit.
